Korean trick move #6

White 5 on Diagram A is a famous trick move, which is really popular in handicap games (even high level professionals are using it)

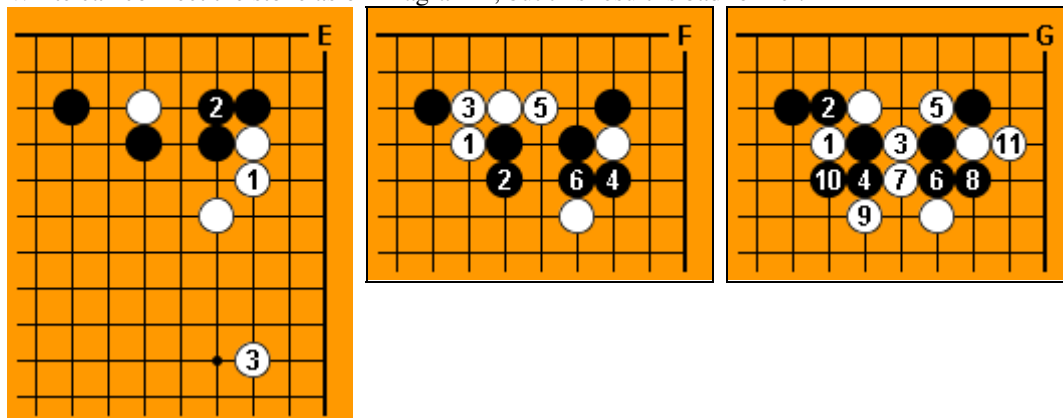

You can see the classic joseki on Diagram B. This pattern was invented in Korea about 10 years ago. The result is exactly equal, but rather comfortable for Black in handicap games.

White is trying to get the corner, without making the marked exchange (Diagram C). Black's position is much weaker than in the standard joseki, so he must find the way to avoid this result.

Black 6 on Diagram D is the only move!

White can connect the stone as on Diagram E, but this result is bad for her.

Usually White is trying to trick the opponent, playing hane 1 on Diagram F. Black must be careful here! You can see the best answer on Diagram F. Black is clearly favorable!

For sure, Black must not cut the stone as on Diagram G. The fight would be hopeless for him.

You can use this trick against the players, who are weaker than 5 kyu. Ask them first, are they getting the "Goama"
